Mexican Turtle Industry.

From the London Globe.
The rivers and fresh water lagoons at some distance from the Mexican coasts literally swarm with turtles of the genus Testudo. They are found even at an altitude of about 3,000 feet above sea level. They attain a considerable size, some of them reaching a weight of sixty-five or even seventy-five pounds. This turtle is considered to be a dainty as well as a staple food all over the Gulf coast region, and is annually taken in great numbers. According to the United States consul at Vera Cruz, the supply seems to be increasing rather than diminishing. The wastes of water hyacinths are simply alive with the creatures, and while the tangle of the plants and roots makes fishing for them difficult, these places are becoming more and more the favorite localities for taking the turtles. In open water they are caught with seines, but among the hyacinths recourse is had to the spear, as this cannot be used advantageously. On account of the lack of shipping facilities the consumption of the turtle is restricted and largely local. It can, however, be easily transported. The turtles will stand shipment of several days by simply being occasionally dosed with cold water, and arrive at their destination in a lively condition.

TO THE HONOR OF HUSBANDS.

From the Chicago Tribune.
That ancient institution of British dignity and liberty, the British husband, established by Henry VIII, and by him endowed with prerogatives, privileges, rights, and franchises, and by him granted immunities and exemptions, by him enjoyed, waxes a bit and is doubly convinced England is going to the dogs. A castle so ancient and so confirmed in perquisites and liberties could not be expected to accept calmly the findings of the royal commission on divorce, recommending that a single standard of moral conduct prevail and govern in the courts—and what is frailty in the wife be more than a fetter in the husband. "Whatever grounds are permitted to a husband for obtaining a divorce from his wife," the report recommends, "shall be available to the wife in a suit against her husband." This, then, say any number of eminently respectable whippers, is what comes of tampering with the sacred principles of government. Asquith is to blame for this. Asquith and that mad gerilla, Lloyd-George, and that impertinent little whiffet, Winston Churchill. They won't be done, sir—mark our words—they won't be done until they've driven all the Englishmen out of England. An Englishman's home is his castle! (Bitter laughing and a glass of claret upset on the table.) By God, sir, there's a fellow comes around to our door and sticks his damnable nose in our house and wants to know, by God, sir, he wants to know if our slavery has stuck her 3-penny stamp on a damnable insurance card. That's Asquith and Lloyd-George for you. And now here's a commission that has the impertinence to tell us that we can't demand of our wives a more, more exemplary life than we demand of ourselves. For a peccadillo, mind you, for peccadillo, they can have us up. It's striking at the holy bonds of matrimony. Thus, any number of eminently respectable whippers in wrath. Their one consolation is that the Archbishop of York signed the minority report.
